

Professional Sparring on Product Development

- exclusively for Scion DTU tenants and associates

Being a small start-up or entrepreneur means total freedom to decide whether the solution at hand is right. Perhaps it is even the main reason for being an entrepreneur in the first place - no one to tell you how and what to develop?

However, sometimes after receiving a prototype that didn't work quite as expected or maybe later when receiving customer complaints, you might wish your organization had been large enough to provide some critical sparring and advice. Not every day, but from time to time, when fundamental, critical or long-term decisions are on the agenda.

This could be covered by our hardware-centric sparring offer. Our experienced product development consultant, Bo Petersen can perform technical review, support you in finding the right solution or help out with contact to suppliers and experts.

Scion DTU's consultant is the technical associate you just don't have 'room for' in your company, but whom you miss whenever technical issues need to be discussed or solved.

What you get

You get 1 hour free of charge with the consultant to present your challenge or problem. If you decide to continue with the consultant, you will have to pay for the following hours.
